These particular Indians were contiunity bent on discovery and expermenting, says Mr. Axtell, Somehow they and come into possession of some wilkworms. These worms were not most of them slied before the natives found out how to mise them. But they persevered and by feeding them on the tender buyes of some native plants preduced a good quality of silk, not so good as the Chinese product by feeding the worms on white mulberry leaves, but nevertheless a strong, serviceable will, certainly good enough for the dusty bodies of these savages, for this wilk has not yet become an article of

Their parthod of obtaining the slik and transferming it into garments was erude. Ween the moths laid the eggs, the natives carried them in great quanwith in belts about their bodies, thus giving the engs the body heat. At the end of winter the eggs were hatched. and the result was an army of caterpulars. These were trained to crawl over the naked bodies of the natives. This was their home. They knew no other and seemed quite contented.

During eight weeks the savage is covered with these yellow crawlers. It would seem that thousands of creeping caterpillars over one's body from head to foot would tickle one to death. Certainly a white man would find it unbearable, but it must be remembered these natives of Brazil are scarcely human. To them it is intensely interesting to train these worms in the way they should go. Small bits of leaves are stuck on the bodies of the natives in regular rows, and round and round the worms go, feeding on the way. The notives belp each other in the placing of the bits of leaves and in confining
